

Washington, D.C. – “The translucent fluctuation of global crude markets coupled with decreasing domestic gas prices, should in no way inhibit or discourage increased U.S. investment in our nation’s alternative and renewable energy resources. Energy independence and the preservation of our natural resources are basic ideals that our government must continue to adhere to and strive to achieve.

“By making the necessary investments in our alternative and renewable energy technologies, we can provide American consumers with affordable and dependable sources of energy that they can use to weatherize their homes and fuel their modes of transportation. America has the technology and innovative ingenuity to significantly boost our diversification and increased production of domestic energy resources.”

-- 30 --